Before Demolition

They never locked the front door, left suits in the wardrobes, wedding photos on the walls, a calendar from '57.
The front porch tiles were strewn with Readers' Digest, final notices.
The half-empty marmalade jar waits beside a postcard from Chicago on the cluttered oilcloth table in October evening lambency, preserved like Scott's last meal before heading out for the Pole, and the sink — blocked with potato skins as it was the day my mother left home.
